The town gave the proposal honorable burial by voting to consider it merely. But, ten years later, March 13, 1677, Deacon Peck, the Church Treasurer, was constrained to make the same motion in Town-Meeting, and for the same reason. It must be set down as one of the paradoxes of human nature that a Puritan community was backward in paying its minister, except under compulsion. Deacon Peck s facts were cogent arguments. The town assented to his motion, and voted to raise yearly for the elder s support a tax of twopence halfpenny in the pound. Where the Church had once been ruler, it was now the client. Henceforth the elder was a public functionary, and it was announced that the minister s tax must be handed by every man to Deacon Peck. There was a young man named John...
