So also, in English, such prepositions as according to, out at, our of, c., are not considered as disfranchised by the supplementary preposition annexed to them. At the same time it is to be noted, that where there is a break between the compound preposition and its supplement, then the former must be considered as an adverb; thus, in the sentence, Kei raro, kei te whare/ it is below, it is m the house; raro is here, as it is in English, an adverb joined to is; the line of connection being broken by a comma. In such a construction as this, the same preposition that precedes the compound preposition, (or lather, in this case, the adverb,) must also follow it. CHAPTER X. OF THE PAETICLES. We have thought it better to devote a separate chapter to the consideration...
