Excerpt: . the subject vanished from her mind, and there was a sense of strangeness; she always stopped, being conscious that if she went on speaking the words would be irrelevant. If she went on reading aloud, she uttered words different from those before her. The condition ceased as suddenly as it came on. It was a long epileptoid state. Somnambulism.--If sleep involves a functional separation between the cortical centres, the strange phenomena of sleep-walking suggest that the separation may vary in its position. In this state, high motor centres must be in an activity similar to that of the waking state, and yet isolated from those that, in due association, subserve consciousness. But the mysteries of sleep and its varieties baffle analysis; the forms of its disturbance must be recognised when they cannot be understood. Simple somnambulism is free from emotional disturbance, and differs...
